Is ASCA Rally and Obedience just for Aussies?-

ASCA Rally and Obedience (as well as Agility) are open to all breeds and mixes. There is also a Junior Handlers program.

Does my dog have to be ASCA registered?-

Yes, your dog must have an ASCA registration number or QT number to enter the trial. An application for an ASCA QT number is included in this premium. There is a one time fee for the QT number which is good for the life time of the dog. QT number applications may be submitted with entry to the trial.

At what level can I start?-

All dogs must start at the Novice level. If your dog has earned any previous Obedience or Rally title, it must start in the "B" class.

Do I have to move up in Rally if the dog has finished its title?-

No, you may continue to trial at that same level once the dog has finished the title in the "C" class. See the ASCA Rally rules for more details.

What is the ODX class in ASCA obedience?

ODX is an alternative to Open without the out of sight stays, beginning 6/1/13. See the ASCA website for more information:
<http://www.asca.org/programs/obedience/odx>

Is my dog eligible for Beginner Novice?

Please note that the rules for the new ASCA Beginner Novice Class state that you may enter any dog that has does not have a CDX or ODX or above from any registry in the Beginner Novice class. Dogs that have earned a CDX/ODX or above may NOT enter this class at all. Dogs that wish to enter the Beginner Novice class MAY also enter either the Novice class or any other alternate titling class they are eligible for at the same trial. This differs from the rules for the class in AKC.
